Introduction

Regenagri standards are international certification schemes for regenerative agriculture owned by Regenagri CIC (hereinafter referred to in this document as "Regenagri").

The Regenagri certification system requires certified organisations to establish mechanisms for receiving and addressing grievances related to their certified activities.

A grievance mechanism provides stakeholders, including workers, supply chain actors, and affected communities, with a structured process to raise concerns regarding the organisation's operations, compliance with Regenagri requirements, or impacts associated with certified activities.

An effective grievance mechanism contributes to transparency, accountability, and continuous improvement within certified organisations and the Regenagri supply chain. It enables organisations to identify and address issues at an early stage and promotes constructive dialogue with stakeholders.

Certification Bodies (CBs) shall verify, as part of the certification and surveillance process, that organisations have established and implemented grievance mechanisms consistent with the requirements defined in this section.

The grievance mechanism does not replace judicial or regulatory procedures but provides an accessible, non-judicial process for addressing concerns related to the organisation's activities.

This section establishes requirements for organisations to establish, implement, and maintain a grievance mechanism addressing concerns related to their certified activities under the Regenagri certification system.

The requirements apply to all organisations seeking or maintaining certification under the Regenagri standard.

The grievance mechanism shall address grievances related to, where applicable:

- Compliance with Regenagri requirements;

- Supply chain integrity and traceability of certified products;

Certification Bodies shall assess the existence and implementation of the grievance mechanism during certification audits and surveillance activities.
